Across the Thames from Belgravia and Tate Britain stands a mansion, a magnificent reminder of eighteenth century Vauxhall and its pleasure gardens. The House, once home to the eponymous Duke is now the LASSCO architectural emporium.

Inside its lofty Georgian interior the panelled rooms are packed with salvaged curiosities, magnificent chimneypieces, brilliant cut glass entranceways, sparkling chandeliers and noble colonnades.

Reclaimed furniture and vintage paraphernalia jostle with an eclectic display of fascinating antiques in each room.

Brunswick House offers an authentic and fascinating backdrop for filming and photo shoots. Each beautifully dressed room is different from the rest, providing unique and interesting spaces.

The house is located in Central London with onsite parking and direct access for loading. The location has been featured in film documentaries, music videos, TV shows, product and fashion photo shoots, commercials and advertising.

THE SALOON AND TERRACE

An impressively shabby room of five bays with access to an outdoor roof terrace with two good chimneypieces and open fires. The green velvet curtains and full height windows enhance the elegant tone of the room, which is furnished with the characteristically quirky stock of LASSCO. Once the drawing room of The Duke of Brunswick and later the snooker room of the LSWR Scientific & Literary Institute, The Saloon adjoins to The Smoking Room.

THE CELLAR ROOMS

Below the Georgian mansion are a series of cellars, wine vaults, sculleries and pantries with large fireplaces, ancient flagstones and venerable brickwork, incorporating the remains of an earlier 17th Century building – intimate and hugely atmospheric and so unexpected. The hire of the Cellar Rooms includes the cellar bar, vaulted room and music room.
