

LASSCO

www.lassco.co.uk

THREE PIGEONS

LASSCO Three Pigeons

Milton Common,

Oxfordshire OX9 2JN

+44 (0)1844 277188

3pigeons@lassco.co.uk

BRUNSWICK HOUSE

30 Wandsworth Road,

London SW8 2LG

+44 (0) 20 7394 2100

brunswick@lassco.co.uk

A RARE MID VICTORIAN STONEWARE GARDEN URN

c.1865, by J.M.Blashfield of Stamford ("The Stamford Terracotta Company")

the tapered vase with a narrow neck and everted rim supporting a pair of opposed eagles forming handles, raised on a socle foot and an associated square section pedestal by Stiff & Co. of London, the urn and pedestal bearing respective maker's marks,

DIMENSIONS: 131cm (51 $\frac{1}{2}$ ") High, 47cm (18 $\frac{1}{2}$ ") Wide, 43cm (17") Deep, (the pedestal 59cm high)

STOCK CODE: 45851

HISTORY

John Marriot Blashfield 1811-82 was an entrepreneurial Victorian businessman whose eventful and inventive career included the manufacture of wonderful stoneware garden ornament such as this urn. He had started out in the manufacture of terracotta, scagliola and cement mosaic pavements from a sizable yard on the Isle of Dogs – an extant business he had bought-out in the 1840's (his, for instance, was the hallway mosaic floor at The Conservative Club in St. James' St).

Etching of urn in the 1857 catalogue

He was long associated with, and influenced by, Owen Jones. He was diversifying the factory's output and, being familiar with the last years of Eleanor Coade's business that had been bought-out and become "Croggan" by the time of its demise in 1833, looked to prevail on that growing market. His architectural stoneware and garden ornament operation expanded. By the time of the Great Exhibition he had a showroom in Praed St in Paddington- and having seen Mark Blanchard's wares at the Exhibition spurred him on and lead to a commission to create the set of colossal statues by John Bell for the Crystal Palace when it was repositioned on Sydenham Hill in 1854 (later destroyed in the fire). His products have long been compared to those of Coade.

Blashfield had taken on the development of Kensington Palace Gardens in the 1840's - prime land adjacent to Kensington Palace. Ultimately he got his fingers burned, his property company went bust, but the terracotta works prospered. He published a number of catalogues through the 1850's and was employing dozens of men.

In 1859 Blashfield made a big move - he took the entire manufacturing business from the Isle of Dogs, north to Stamford in Lincolnshire in order to be proximate to the best clays that he needed for his kilns. He had bought Grant's Iron-works that had a wharf on the River Welland.

Whilst the relocation seems to have paid-off, in the 1860's Blashfield over-stretched himself with attempts to expand his markets into the United States. The costs of shipping was making the operation unprofitable and continual breakages were delaying payments - notably for architectural embellishments for new Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. The Stamford Terracotta Company – as it was then known – collapsed in 1874. Blashfield declared bankruptcy in 1878.

This urn features in Blashfield's 1857 brochure "A Selection of Vases, Statues, Busts, & c. from Terra-Cottas. Plates, with an introduction. Published by John Weale, 59, High Holborn" and was clearly still in production a few years later as it bears the maker's stamp "J.M.BLASHFIELD, STAMFORD No.315" dating it until after the 1859 move to Stamford when the stamp changed. LASSCO unearthed the urn in a garden in Surrey; it is known to have been in the collection of Murray Adams-Acton – a prolific antiques dealer between the wars in London – one half of the "Acton Sergey" dealership partnering Frank Sergey.