HISTORY

This is a cleverly designed wall-mounted fire basket. All cut from one thick steel square plate, the bars have been pushed upwards in turn – the outer until it's 90degrees, the next slightly less-so until the innermost, smallest rectilinear hoop is still almost vertical. A great design and hard to make.

If mounting as a firepit externally, it would benefit from maintenance as the graphite based finish will in time rust through (one solution might be to settle for the rust finish, another to paint the metal work with a fire-proof paint).
