HISTORY

Solid beech blocks as used in the early 20th Century – Edwardian to Art Deco – to cover large open spaces in civic, domestic or commercial premises. Reclaimed parquet comes to you graded, sorted and bagged: 1sqm per bag.... this batch is in the warehouse and ready to go. The blocks are tongue-and-grooved – some tongues will be lacking. Usually laid as herringbone but other styles such as Dutch-bond (brick-wise) can look great – run the field under the skirting for a more expansive feel or run a border with the same blocks.

The blocks come in a spectrum of straw and lighter cream shades, the grain is small and tight with beech: hardwearing. It is versatile in terms of finish.

These blocks are reclaimed and have a light layer of bitumen on their underside. These are usually re-laid without removing the bitumen – today's adhesives stick the old to your sub-floor but this does mean it can not be combined with underfloor heating.
