HISTORY

Solid pine blocks as used in the Victorian and Edwardian periods to cover large open spaces in civic, domestic or commercial premises. Reclaimed parquet comes to you graded, sorted and bagged: 1sqm per bag.... this batch is in the warehouse and ready to go. The blocks are tongue-and-grooved – some tongues will be lacking. Usually laid as herringbone but other styles such as Dutch-bond (brick-wise) can look great – run the field under the skirting for a more expansive feel or run a border with the same blocks.

The blocks come in a spectrum of straw and lighter cream shades, the grain is pronounced as this is slow grown old pine – robust. It is versatile in terms of finish.

These blocks are reclaimed and have a light layer of bitumen on their underside. These are usually re-laid without removing the bitumen – today's adhesives stick the old to your sub-floor but this does mean it can not be combined with underfloor heating.
