Prices are per square metre.

Reclaimed from the Stockwell Printworks on Clapham road during recent refurbishment. Panga Panga is a species of very dense, dark hardwood which was used in hard wearing situations such as plants, workshops, public buildings and manufactories during the 19th and early 20th centuries. The timber is almost impervious to damage, resisting all manner of insects, fungi and rot. Although still commercially cultivated its further felling is controversial and reuse of this tropical hardwood relieves pressure on ancient forests. The blocks come in a variety of sizes and the condition of different batches varies. All have residual bitumen on the underside of the block. We encourage customers to get in touch with our flooring office for further information.
